

Biography

Michael Calaway

Vice President, Marketing

Michael Calaway joined Swagelok Company as vice president, marketing in 2023. In this role, Michael leads market strategies and drives product commercialization and lifecycle management efforts. He is also responsible for overseeing the global marketing communications and pricing strategies teams to ensure a consistent brand experience.

He has a strong background in strategic planning and product management. Prior to joining Swagelok, he worked at Emerson for 10 years. Michael began as a business development manager and progressed to roles as director of marketing for the tank management division, vice president, product management for the electric actuators and gears division, and most recently, vice president, product management for the actuation technologies division.

Earlier in his career, Michael worked as an instrumentation engineer for ExxonMobil, where he was first introduced to Swagelok products—as a customer. He holds a Bachelor of Science in electrical engineering from Texas Tech University and a Master of Business Administration from Southern Methodist University.

Outside of work, Michael is an avid golfer and enjoys nature photography. He is happily married to his wife Amanda and loves spending time with his growing family.